Rural Indigenous Sustainable Education (RISE) is an organization representing Indigenous Peoples across Myanmar. RISE was established by a collective of Indigenous education focused organizations, which work together and support their own communities in remote, often conflict-affected areas across Myanmar.

RISE promotes the interests of Indigenous Peoples and children in Myanmar and their right to provide and access a culturally appropriate, quality education in their own mother tongue. The specific objectives of the group are:

- Promote Indigenous knowledge, language and culture.
- Ensure access to quality; culturally appropriate education for Indigenous Peoples.
- Engage community members and families concerning education issues in their communities.
- Advocate for the rights of Indigenous Peoples in particular with respect to Indigenous knowledge and wisdom, language, cultural heritage and education rights.

RISE's current activities include pre-service, in service and mobile teacher training, parent education and awareness, school management capacity building, provision of teaching and learning materials, facilitating education awareness raising events and deploying teachers to communities where schooling is not available. We currently support over 2000 schools, 12,000 teachers, 300,000 students and 50000 parents.

RISE has developed from the Eastern Burma Community Schooling project, which has been supporting Indigenous education in Myanmar since 2011.

RISE is interested in collaborative partnerships with organizations working to promote access to quality education in Indigenous communities across Myanmar. Please contact us for more information.
